

Gone Fishin'

Even though most of Inyo's creeks and rivers were now funneled into a concrete lined ditch and sent off to the great metropolis to the south, they all continued to flow freely in the looming Sierra Nevada mountains and the canyons and lowlands immediately below them.

And in these abundant waters, one thing was certain ... a bevy of hungry and tasty fish were just waiting for a skilled angler to come along and relieve the watercourse of some of its treasure.

It's a safe bet to say most of those living in the Owens Valley area of Inyo County obtained a substantial portion of their weekly groceries from the cool and clear waters of the nearby creeks and streams.
